A made-up page whose text runs on almost to the foot of the page, as some papers set it, with no more than a narrow margin below its last line. Its last lines are still read with the rest, and a footer set apart below them is not. This sentence, though, does not end on this page, but carries on over it, broken in the middle of a word as it goes onto the next, example of one, and ends here on the second page. Then the second page carries on with a sentence of its own, over two lines, and that is all it has to say about it.

Nothing here means anything at all, and the words were made up for testing, as were the pages they are on.