The first paragraph of a made-up page begins here and carries on over a second line of words that mean nothing, and ends on a third.

A second paragraph follows after a gap, as most do, and has two lines.

A third is only set in from the line before it, as some books set them.

The second page has one paragraph of its own, over two lines.